Speaking Across Barriers:
How Parents in a Canadian Public School System
Learn About Their Children's Diversity Education

HREB #22-0136  University of Victoria, School of Public Administration

A student's education is supported by the provincial and municipal government. But what does the average parent, guardian, or caregiver know about what the school district's strategic plans are for the future of the community?

I invite all parents, guardians, and caregivers of students in a school in SD62 to help participate in and co-conduct research into this important question:

How do parents know what their children are learning about inclusion, diversity, equity, and accessibility?
